MR. KANNNANTHODATH JANARDANAN NAIR : In view of the fact that the information has been supplied by the Credit Bank, does not my question relating to the percentage of loan granted to the agriculturists arise as a natural corollary?

MR. M. GOVINDA PILLAI: I claim notice.

MR. KANNANTHODATH JANARDANAN NAIR : Sir, on a point of order. The question that I put just now is a natural corollary to the main question. That being the case, my point is whether the honourable member can claim notice.

PRESIDENT : The Credit Bank is a separate institution unconnected with Government. But, as Government have taken interest in its inception and are interested equally in its working, they have asked the Credit Bank to supply all information which the honourable members of the House are anxious to obtain. The honourable member who speaks on behalf of Government in this matter does so on information furnished by the Credit Bank. Although he might have got certain specific information, he might not have thought that the corollary which the honourable member has in his mind was a necessary or essential corollary and therefore he might not have armed himself with the necessary information. That is the reason why he claims notice.
